Another movie in the Ouija franchise came out over the weekend.

It's called "Ouija: Origin of Evil."

It raked in an estimated $14 Million in its debut weekend and landed in third place at the box office.

Of course the plot involves using the infamous Ouija gameboard to contact the dead and ask them questions.

Amazon.com has come under fire for selling Ouija boards aimed at children as young as eight.

Also, you can still get the pink version of the game that appeals specifically to young girls who tend to use it at sleepovers and parties.

But don't you agree this is no mere "game"?

The dangers are very real when it comes to opening a door to the occult.

Such activity is clearly forbidden in the Bible:

Deuteronomy 18:10-12 (NASB)

"There shall not be found among you anyone who makes his son or his daughter pass through the fire, one who uses divination, one who practices witchcraft, or one who interprets omens, or a sorcerer, For one who casts a spell, or a medium, or a spiritist, or one who calls up the dead. For whoever does these things is detestable to the LORD.."

Leviticus 19:31 (NASB)

"Do not turn to mediums or spiritists; do not seek them out to be defiled by them. I am the LORD your God."

Isaiah 8:19 (NASB)

"When they say to you, "Consult the mediums and the spiritists who whisper and mutter," should not a people consult their God? Should they consult the dead on behalf of the living?"

No matter how innocent Ouija boards may seem, what they really do is open us up to demonic influence.

When I was a child, we had a Ouija Board in our home before my parents started walking with Christ. Strange things did indeed happen, and that's why I know it's not just "innocent fun". By the way, when we got rid of the Ouija Board these strange things no longer happened in our home.

Whether it's the "game" or the films, have you ever dabbled in this?

What happened?

Did it open up doorway to the occult?

Ronni Epperheimer This is certainly an important thing to talk about but honestly a conversation I can barely handle to listen to. This is a very real thing and talking about it, seeing movie previews, or anything related nearly debilitates me. I have been a believer a long time but I've seen the effects on other people and it's scary. We don't talk about this much in the US but it's real. I watched someone fall into a grand mal seizure after seeing a picture of a voodoo object in the middle of a church service. I've always prayed demons out debilitates me. I have been a believer a long time but I've seen the effects on other people and it's scary. We don't talk about this much in the US but it's real. I watched someone fall into a grand mal seizure after seeing a picture of a voodoo object in the middle of a church service. I've always prayed demons out of close friends, it's no joke and nothing that should be played with. We need to educate our young ones so they know to stay clear. Have a good conversation!

Liz Anderson So true, Ronni. I went to a craft fair a week ago, and a woman was selling voodoo dolls. I touched one because I had no idea what it was at first. I'm still creeped out about it.

Stephie Jean I am very close with someone who does this. For the sake of their privacy, I won't say who they are.. just this story.. (please, don't comment on "darkness cannot be friends with light...")

About a year ago, I was going to stay the night with them. They had a few friends over, so they got out the Ouija board (they are all into this) and tried doing what they could. I sat in the living room and they were in the kitchen. They tried for over an hour. The person whose house I was at became very exasperated and said they didnt understand.. in all of their years they've never not had some sort of experience while using the Ouija board.

What they didnt know is that, since I already knew this person lets spirits in their house by doing this, I prayed as soon as I got to the house. I asked for God to cleanse the house. I asked him to protect me. I told anything evil that may be there to leave in Jesus's name. Then, again, while they did Ouija, I prayed and went back to reading The Case For Christ. Prayer is powerful!!

Angela Sisto What a great friend you are Stephanie! Instead of condemning your friend or engaging in the behavior... you prayed! You did something powerful for your friend and those that were participating.

Charles Smith I agree with your assessment. God answers our prayers for those we love who are bound (or about to become deluded by) the satanic beings who operate around such things. God bless you for your courage and love for your friends. I will pray that you can also see them eventually come to know the One Who did deliver them temporarily at that time, even though they didn't like you interfering with their "fun" at the time. May there come a time when they tire of it, or realize it for what it is, and want to be freed from anything that it has led them into. I will pray for that, also, tonight.

2 · 20 hrs · Edited

Stephie Jean Thank you, Charles. The person is vehemently opposed to belief in God. They need all of the prayer they can get. ❤️

Charles Smith Yes, I understand. I had a relative who was involved in occult things who resisted coming to the Lord. I'm not sure just why? I was much younger than her. I did witness to her after I came to know Jesus. To my knowledge she never accepted Jesus, although I did see her soften a bit the last time that I saw her before she died (maybe she was beginning to doubt some of the things that she had believed in before, as we prayed for her salvation). I pray that she did receive Him. I wasn't near her when she died. But there is always hope that she did. But, as we pray, God can often eventually work with those we love. I have seen Him do it with others in my family. Sometimes we (like myself at 72) will not live to see them change. I hope so. I know that we can not force anyone to believe. God lets it up to each person. But we can

But, as we pray, God can often eventually work with those we love. I have seen Him do it with others in my family. Sometimes we (like myself at 72) will not live to see them change. I hope so. I know that we can not force anyone to believe. God lets it up to each person. But we can assist those who will come to believe in Him by our prayers. Often those who seem very resistant finally "break", or something helps to "get through to them" as we love them. I was once very resistant to hearing about Him myself. So I will pray for them. It was the kindness and caring nature of the Christians who I ran across in my life that really turned my heart to Jesus. I think that then, as I began to want to follow Him, the prayers of others helped to deliver me from the stranglehold that Satan had on my own heart and life (not wanting to hear about God, etc.). So I will pray that your (and other Christians') love will break down some of the barriers that might be there in this person's heart, also. /// Also, I forgot to mention that I myself had some involvement with the occult just before I was saved; and prayers of others definitely did help to deliver me from some of the demonic oppression that I suffered from that involvement. That deliverance wasn't what drew me to Jesus, since it didn't happen until right after I had become a Christian. I also believe that my parent's prayers shielded me from much of the deception that Satan would have placed into my mind, otherwise, before I came to know Christ (when I was dabbling around with some of the occult things myself). So I know that other people's prayers had a powerful influence in my own life; and I know that He hears our prayers for others when we pray for their salvation. Thank you again for your faith and love for others. May you see many of them saved.

Paul Michaud It is for real and it's not just a game. I have used the board and I have confessed to God to receive forgiveness. It's never a good idea to do what God has told us not to do. I am so thankful for God's grace and mercy.

Matthew Vaughan 8th grade oral report one girl decided to use the board as part of her report. Of course I charged the throne room to protect the class. She couldn't get it to work well and she asked it what was wrong and it said " He has to go" and she said who and the board spelt my name out. No one spells my last name right, they don't put the A in the end so I knew a 8th grade girl couldn't spell my last name. Teacher asked me to leave, I fought him as everyone heard my report I should be able to listen to all of theirs but he made me stand in the hall and then the board worked just fine. It was a good witness tool to the group as they wanted to know why it pointed me out and I had a chance to tell them of Christ

Kathleen Alice Gaetano I'm a Christian. I have used a Ouija board in the past. Believe me or not but I am going to tell you it is VERY REALLY REAL. I watched this movie just for Halloween scary movie entertaining purposes but I can tell you all never use one in real life. Yes you are moving the planchette. But it is the whatever entity using your energy. I stopped using one because it frightened me so much. I felt like I was being pushed and felt sick. When I said and moved the planchette to goodbye I felt fine. But then I heard things and felt really weird. Just close the Ouija and open your Bible for answers. The movie however was scary just for entertainment and I love Halloween type stuff like that.

Michael Pander Hollywood has been making movies and TV programs with the Ouija board for a while. and other things that bring the evil spirits into the home. that is disguised as entertainment but is not and powerfully play with the spirits of evil. it is good to talk about it before someone actually is controlled by the spirit of the board in life as a warning not play with the board or other things of bad spirits. and Halloween is the time when this stuff is looked upon as harmless things like a game but is to be avoided because of the harm to one's life. in the Bible talks about evil spirits that take control of a person and Jesus and the disciples cast out demons out of a person.

Kathleen Alice Gaetano Oh shoot I commented before but I'm actually listening for a while on the radio. Just a bit longer and it is bed time for me. But a caller said the movie would make Ouija boards cool. I've watched the movie and any movie about that or demons always ends up either some unfortunate stuff happens and characters go crazy or die or with demons good always wins. Whether that good is Christian or just general good. This movie does not make me want to play with a Ouija board just to put that out there. It does show the evilness of it and anyone who thinks its cool is probably wiccan part of the occult or whatever if you think its cool. It was just a creepy movie well made that shows dangers of the ouija board. There is no mention of religion other than a Catholic priest being in it. But it does show its evil.

StPete Seraphim You are not alone I had some kid berate me about a song I posted on Kurts website. He was using a bunch of information he got from his father, the author of lies, the prince of the air Satan himself, to try and convince me that the guys in the band were not Christians. After his "sermon" he had the nerve to call me his brother which really irked me in a way I can't describe. Vanessa Latimer I heard this conversation last night and I wanted to respond. My son while in job core, had a roommate that found one in the closet. They decided to play with it. My son said that all the guys had their hands on the board, when the question was asked. He said, when the pointer began moving, everyone jumped up and ran out of the room. He said it frightened him so badly, that he asked to be moved from that dorm. I just see all the demonic association with this item. It holds evil in it. I just pray that people wake up and see what happening.

Shawne TA Stephens Thank God for a Christian mother who taught us from early on to stay away from Ouija boards and the 8 ball. She warned us they were of the devil and that no one can tell your future but God and that if anyone took one to school, do not get involved in it. Whenever I see them in a store, I say a prayer that they will have no effect and I plead the Blood of Jesus on them.

I was telling someone last week that no one can speak to the dead. They thought they could because a medium (on TV) knew everything about the deceased and I told them its only the devil and he knows about the deceased and he is doing it to deceive people into believing it which only allows them to delve into the demonic world.

Kathleen Alice Gaetano I don't think when they decided to market the game they thought it was harmless. But the spirit board type thing been around for centuries I heard. I really don't think they thought it was real when marketing it. But it is real and very scary. This topic is sensitive for me. I've used one and I literally lost my sanity and was so scared at one point. But felt addicted to the board like I wanted to stop but could not. And the more you use it the more you give evil forces energy to come out. I even had it spell get out. I did not know if it meant me or it. But afterward I felt pain in my shoulder blades and felt nauseated. And it does not cause you to be like that girl in the exorcist. A simple possession could be depression suicidal thoughts. Satan wants you to hate yourself. I think the people who have used a Ouija board are more likely to tell you not to use one.

Charles Smith Yes, I once dabbled with some occult practices, not specifically with the Ouija board (maybe one time, but it never "worked" for me). Mine was more like meditation, hoping that some intuitive idea or feeling or thought might show up on the screen of my mind in order to give me some direction about my life at the time (sometimes to figure out a morally neutral thing like how much class load to tackle in a semester, other times how to find a girl who could "make me happy" -- not necessarily a moral choice); and occasionally trying some sort of "prayer" or "command in the spirit" to bring about what I wanted to happen. None of them worked very well for me (probably because my parents were praying for my salvation, and so that I would not get led astray from the right path that they had taught me when a child), except that I did run into a wonderful young lady (which might have happened anyway) after "praying" for that; and we enjoyed a great summer together. That was the only thing at the time that I attributed to any influence that my dabbling in occult practices could have had on the outcome of anything that I was interested in at the time. However, soon after that, when I wanted to accept Jesus, and follow Him, I did have difficulties with bad dreams and some kinds of demonic activity in my mind, that made me unable to handle my mental work very well until I was delivered from it by a prayer group who had prayed for such deliverance for us; the director himself had been into the occult before he was saved, and knew what to do from his own experiences. I know of other persons who had "better luck" "having success" with the occult, finding out that things did "work out" for them (at least temporarily) after they had practiced some of these things; and they got more deceived by them. The main danger that I see from these occult practices is that there is no moral direction or requirements associated with them. Anyone, a thief, a murderer -- any type of person, supposedly -- can get some kind of "connection" with some "god" or "spirit" (or even a "force") that will allow him to stir up (concoct) his or her own "mixture" of the things that he or she wants to happen, and somehow get those things to happen, despite them being not so good (or even detrimental) to someone else's welfare; whereas, the Lord of our universe made man to be responsible to Himself, and to live for others' sakes (caring for them, also -- even sacrificially when needed), according to clearly understood reasons and morality. So the occult is basically man's attempt to control God (or the "god" that they would like to be able to manipulate to their own desires and wills -- not the real God of our universe, and of the Bible, of course). And anything that tends to impress or convince people that anything like that is true is a deception that can lead them to believe in a lie, and result in them never seeking the true (personal, caring) God Who loves manipulate to their own desires and wills -- not the real God or our universe, and of the Bible, of course). And anything that tends to impress or convince people that anything like that is true is a deception that can lead them to believe in a lie, and result in them never seeking the true (personal, caring) God Who loves all men, and wants them to learn to love each other again (after the fall) -- and so they never believe in Him Who is true, and end up in hell instead. So the deception (if God allows people to be deceived, and to go on in their deceptions -- which the Bible clearly states that He will eventually do, if persons continually reject His truth and prefer to follow their own sinful natures: see 1 Thessalonians 2:11-12, for example) is what damns people. It is not demonic possession (or oppression) -- which often "wakes up" persons, and may cause them to cry out to God for their deliverance, and to want to be free from it, to and get away from it eventually -- if the possession or oppression has not driven them to some self-destructive behavior that takes their lives first. But, if the person is "all for" whatever kinds of deviant behaviors that he or she becomes involved in with the occult practices, and never wants to repent or become freed from them, then I suppose that they can go all of their lives without realizing that they have been deceived and are on a wrong course(?). I never got that far myself, before I was convicted about the sinfulness of my trying to manipulate God for my own selfish ends, and for not caring about others. Anyway, I think that is what God is concerned about most -- that no one becomes deceived by any effects that he or she might get out of involvement with demons, as they sometimes are allowed to "pull off" some "supernatural stuff" to impress persons who "mess around" with them. Thankfully, if people read the Bible, and understand the character of God (Who is not selfish, or self-centered) they will see that a lot of what they want to get out of the occult doesn't fit in with His plan for us (how He wanted us to be -- like Himself in love for others). /// I think that the appeal of occult things is that it let's us think that we are in control of God (and can persuade or in some way move Him to do what we, selfish individuals, want Him to do for us), rather than the other way around, where He, a loving, caring Creator, wants to enable us and then teach us to become like Him in character, to be able to share with Him in the joy of loving Him and other persons (not just ourselves) and caring for them (and all of His creation with Him) as mature persons in Christ, and to raise up more people for His kingdom (and children for Him). And when Satan can trick anyone into believing this lie, they will never seek the True One, and end up in hell as undeveloped, dwarfed, selfish creatures still, cut off from the amazing future "home" He had prepared for them. /// Also, since I had mentioned the beautiful young lady I had met while engaged in some of the occult practices, I wanted to say that it brought an unsettling thought to my mind at the time, that may have helped to ruin what might have otherwise become a good relationship between us (if she indeed had had nothing to do with my occult practices at the time). I had to think about the fact that if she had come to me simply because I had "wished her" or done something to influence her decisions about me without her having chosen it by herself, then she was more like some manikin or "machine-woman" than a real genuine human person who loved me out of her own choices. I didn't want that kind of a relationship. But, at the time, I remember thinking, "Well, if some other entity, or "god" knew ahead of time that she would naturally love me anyway, and "he" knew what was good for the both of us, then that would be "O.K." with me (and seemed to be a good idea to me at the time). But the other thought that maybe it had something to do with my trying to manipulate things through these practices sometimes put a damper on some of my enthusiasm about becoming serious about our relationship. So, I just wanted to point this factor out to us: whenever we try to manipulate what others (God, or anyone else) do by some occult means (or any other means) it dehumanizes the whole relationship, and makes it into a matter of not real genuine love between us, but one of impersonal coercion; and we were not made for such relationships by our Creator; and they never satisfy us, or the other person's heart and soul. So, I also believe that when we attempt to influence others by any occult means it will hurt (eventually destroy) what God intended for our happiness and joy with the impersonal coercion; and we were not made for such relationships by our Creator; and they never satisfy us, or the other person's heart and soul. So, I also believe that when we attempt to influence others by any occult means it will hurt (eventually destroy) what God intended for our happiness and joy with the persons we know. I remember thinking at the time, "Now I wish I had not been involved with that practice; and I would know for sure that something that I did has not worked some deception on her own mind that she will eventually come out from under -- and then it will end when her mind becomes clear (or different) about us." Anyway, that is a ruinous thought to have to have in the middle of one's otherwise good relationship. Nothing permanent worked out between us for some other good, necessary reasons. But that certainly taught me a lesson, and was one of the major reasons that I decided that I did not want to be involved with any more occult practices again. So, perhaps God did send her into my life at that time in order to teach me a "backdoor" lesson about it.

Liz Anderson When I was a child, I thought Ouija boards were fun. I thought that, "talking to the other side," was exciting... Forbidden. It's inherently forbidden for a good reason. Looking back, I can't remember a particular moment that it opened a doorway to the occult, but, there has been plenty of bad things to happen after playing with the Ouija board. Magic 8 Ball, chants to conjure up the dead (while looking in the mirror), tarot cards... it's everywhere for kids. And terrifying.

Barbara Nipp When I was a child our mother warned us to stay away from such things. She was born and raised near an area of the country where witchcraft and such was prevalent. But she became saved and lived and taught God's way to her children. I thank God for a loving Christian mother. She told us explicitly not to ever mess around with ouija boards and told us to stay away from and avoid a certain area not far from our own neighborhood where weird and ungodly things were going on. We were obedient to her. Today we need more than ever to pray for and teach our precious children the truth of God's Word, that He would protect them from exposure to such things as you have mentioned here tonight. God's Word will prevail .

Lynn C. Schoenberg So glad I can't sleep tonight..(2 am here) Great topic. I hope to talk to you around 4:15 am. In my listening this am, I am amazed at how many older people, like myself, had that board in their home as a child... Very scary. In todays world our young ones are bored and aren't given enough to do around their homes and the social media is a big problem for them. They believe in what they hear from outside sources and have group discussions.. They say, Oh I'll try this or that once, what can it hurt..It's witchcraft playing with that board, whether in a group or two friends.. Most of the callers tonight hit the nail on the head...My granddaughter (15) won't go near one. I told her my story as a child with the board and without hesitation she said, "you won't see or hear that I been around one".. Praise God..The fear of God is in her heart.. They are dangerous.. I also think the kids who are lonely or having a rough time turn to the boards for answers THEY want to hear.. It leads to suicide in my book.. Thanks for the Topic.. Whatever happen to playing with Paper Dolls ??

Sandi Leigh Reagan I agree that these products are dangerous. But I'd like to know if anyone has experiences with Reiki or crystals? I've met a new friend who is lovely and I'd love to accept her invitations for tea. But I'm afraid to because she is VERY involved in these things. As someone said she's convinced that her dabbling in right in line with the Bible.

Stephie Jean As a licensed massage therapist, I was very interested in yoga and reiki. Both of which, I can tell you now are not Christian things. Every time I started to look into them God told me "no, these are not of Me." Stretching your muscles is a wonderful thing, but yoga is specifically designed to put your body into the positions of their gods to help the spirits enter you.

As far as crystals, I am of the opinion that they are fine as long as you're not placing undue power on them. Think of it like this: gold is fine to wear as a ring or necklace.. but not okay to make into a calf to worship. Kind of the same idea.

Kerry Kraemer We as Christians are to try and remain as pure as we can. There is enough evil in this world, without looking for more. There are so many things that are disguised as "social " that are really the broad highway. The media in general, with the repetitious replay of horrific events in the news makes me numb and so I avoid t v . Also this generation has developed a culture that seeks violence as a form of honor, to solve differences, I think this is all part of of the unfolding of the end times. The fact that children are the target of this is especially hard for me, I try to reconcile facts in this regard but I find that I m drawn to the conclusion that often times its a case of casting pearls before swine, I run into a lot of people that I seek to help but they seem to be oblivious to reality. I know I got off the topic, but it just seems that we need to pray for our nation to receive a revival, I m so grateful that I m alive in Christ.

Charles Smith Thanks, sister. I believe that you hit the nail on the head: prayers for our people (and individuals, specifically) -- the very thing that makes the least sense to us physically speaking. I dabbled in some of the occult practices just before I became a Christian, and experienced demonic oppression for about a year afterwards that caused me to loose my job, since it depended upon me being able to think clearly. I went to a prayer meeting where the people had been praying specifically for those of us oppressed by Satanic or demonic influences to be delivered; and I was delivered, and have since been free of the confusion and able to think clearly. Also, I believe that my think clearly. I went to a prayer meeting where the people had been praying specifically for those of us oppressed by Satanic or demonic influences to be delivered; and I was delivered, and have since been free of the confusion and able to think clearly. Also, I believe that my parent's prayers for me while I was briefly dabbling in it prevented the demonic beings that normally work with those involved in it from being allowed to trick me into believing any of it at the time. (It didn't "work" for me like it did for others.) Instead, for some reason, I suddenly decided to read what the Bible had to say about it, and ended up reading more of the Bible (got interested in it instead), and eventually began to believe it instead, and ended up believing Christ. I think now that God allowed me to "taste" just a bit of it and it's bad results, so that I'd know how serious it is, and keep away from it -- and also, so that I would know what to do to help others caught in it to be delivered from it (actually from the deceitful beings that associate themselves with such practices). I believe with you that our prayers for God to hinder or remove (or destroy) the demons (and their ability to deceive persons) is the way that God holds out for us to defeat Satan and his demons in this area, and to help to deliver our people from his influences -- as well as in other areas where he has been deceiving our people and many of us for so long. I will certainly be praying with you.

Do you allow your kids to do sleepovers? Why or why not?

It's a question each parent has to answer for themselves. Blogger Tim Challies says sleepovers are off limits for his kids. He says this: "Now let's be clear: there is no biblical command that forbids them, so this was not a matter of clear right and wrong, but a matter of attempting to act with wisdom. We determined we would make it a family rule: Our children would not be allowed to spend the night at their friends' homes. We believed they would face a particular kind of vulnerability if they found themselves alone and in bed outside our care, and we wanted to protect them from it. So they have stayed at their grandparents' and have stayed with my sisters but they have not stayed at friend's homes."

Where do you land on this?
